Many of us have clients with cases in the courts of Puerto Rico and federal court at the same time. How can we be sure that the "concurrent sentences" we bargain for will, in fact, result in no additional time?

Sure, the BOP looks to the Judgment and Commitment order, but it also has its own rules about where credit goes. Who has "primary jurisdiction"? What can you do if the BOP will not credit him for all the time spent at MDC, say, because he was serving a state sentence when taken there for trial?

Unless you know the answer to this and similar questions, YOU NEED TO COME TO THIS, PRACDL'S 2008 "TERTULIA LEGAL," an informal format used to present important information.
